THE GREEN DRAGON OF LA JOLLA.

Who has not visited La Jolla? Who has not been a sojourner at one of the most beautiful spots on California's western slope? Who has not visited the famous tunnel; wandered through its caves, bathed in the surf in the little land-locked cove; went boating to the submarine gardens, had glimpses of the beautiful specimens of the finny tribe disporting themselves from Gold Fish Point, gathered from the beach the famous abalone shells and countless specimens of seaweed, seen the waves wildly dash against Aligator Head, lunched at the sumptuous table at Seaside Inn? And who of the thousands of tourists who have reveled in the charms that this popular resort affords has not heard of Anna Held, mistress of "Green Dragon Colony"; who has not seen her quaint cottages, "Den," "Gables," "Studio," "The Open Door," "The Barn," "The Ark," "The Wigwam," "The Outlook," "The Tent," etc.? Who has not witnessed her hospitality, her novel ideas in house building and furnishing, and seen inscriptions from famous persons on rafter and crossbeam?

Well, he who has missed all these things has missed much. Reverting to our subject, we will say that the Miss Anna Held of this sketch is not the actress of histrionic fame. She makes no boast of lineage, but is plain and hospitable Anna Held. Graduating from one of the best kindergarten schools that Germany affords she came to this country and soon found employment in her chosen profession in the family of a New York clergyman at the munificent salary of $4 a month. With an ambition born of high hopes she is soon found occupying a similar position, this time at $70 per month. Later she was employed in establishing a kindergarten school in Nashua, N. H., and a few years afterward was fortunate in securing a position in the family of General Palmer, Colorado Springs. She then emigrated further westward, arriving in San Diego and finding employment in the home of U. S. Grant. While there she visited La Jolla, and upon being impressed with its situation and future possibilities, purchased a lot and erected thereon a small inclosure, which developed later by additions to a comfortable house. She then conceived the idea of erecting a number, and now owns twelve, no one being a counterpart of the other. Each has its own characteristics and oddities, and the Green Dragon, her favorite, seems to be the culmination of them all in desirable features. During her stay in the east she became acquainted with Ellen Terry, Modjeska, and a number of other celebrities, and secured while there from Miss Terry the position of lady-in-waiting, a part she filled very acceptably. She has crossed the ocean several times, but now makes this place her permanent home. The two ladies here mentioned have occupied the Green Dragon, and have left mementoes of their visits, and Modjeska is expected again in about a week. Everything is made to subserve a purpose in the erection and furnishing of these little cottages, and for this reason a halo of charm and curiosity surrounds them.

By reason of her love for children she has developed a mania for dolls, gives them pet names, dresses them quaintly, and has made quite a business in selling them to tourists. Her home is visited by artists, musicians, actresses, and professional people, who are always given a cordial welcome. The tourist visiting California will soon hear of Miss Anna Held, and will soon make a pilgrimage to beautiful La Jolla.

"On Friday night, July 24th, a bracelet of Mexican nickels, with the eagles carved out, was lost."

The above was left at the PROGRAM office yesterday during the absence of the editor. Will the writer call around and give us a little more definite information? Or does he want our detective force to take the case up?

The new Social Tent was put in position on the Plaza yesterday. It will be carpeted, furnished, and generally fitted up for receptions and card parties. A sign bearing the word "Cardinal" is being prepared for the outside.

A neat and unique paper is the one issued at that famous seaside resort, Coronado Beach, California. —Winslow Mail.
